

Puffers are fish that inflate their bellies with air when frightened to avoid being swallowed by predators. Puffers like shallow water and are often found in seagrass beds. Their strong teeth are used to crush shellfish. Some puffers are poisonous if eaten by humans.